IF YOU GO TO THE MOVIES HAVE YOUR PENNY READY; WAR TAX IN OPERATION

All Theatres Started on Monday to Collect new War Tax Ordered by the Ontario Government.

BUY TICKETS

It Will Cost you a Cent Extra to see the Hero Kiss the Heroine at Moore's Theatre now.

The war tax on theatres and all amusement places came into effect on Monday, and on Monday night theatre patrons in GRIMSBY had to pay an extra cent to see the Hero and Heroine of the movie performance.

The GRIMSBY people did not take kindly to the extra cent charge and Manager Moore had little or no trouble over the extra ticket.

The Government supplies the tickets to theatre and amusement park managers, and you can buy one or a hundred of them at once if you wish. They are good in any theatre or on any amusement device in Ontario, where the price of admission is not over ten cents.

Many people on Monday night purchased as high as a quarter worth of the tickets and for a while to come will not be bothered with the old copper when they go to purchase an admission ticket.

The law provides that each theatre must provide a paid ticket taker and a chequer machine to drop the tickets in.

Everybody who goes into a theatre must have a war tax ticket, even if he does not have to purchase an admission ticket. No person except employees are allowed in without a war tax ticket, and even the members of a theatre owner's family must pay the war tax.

Any theatre owner (manager or employee who allows a person to enter without a war tax ticket is liable to a fine of $200.

In order to avoid confusion and trouble on rush nights at Moore's theatre we would advise everyone to purchase at least a dime's worth of war tax tickets and then you will not have to worry about the old copper.

The law reads as follows:

(a) A tax of one cent shall be paid by all patrons of places of amusement paying not more than ten cents for admission and reserved seat.

(b) A tax of two cents shall be paid by all patrons of places of amusement paying more than ten cents and not more than fifty cents for admission and reserved seat.

(c) A tax of five cents shall be paid by all patrons of places of amusement paying more than fifty cents and not more than one dollar for admission and reserved seat.

(d) A tax of ten cents shall be paid by all patrons of places of amusement paying more than one dollar for admission and reserved seat.

The Provincial Treasurer will supply the tickets.

LITTLE PROGRESS MADE AT CONFERENCE ON JOINT SHELTER

Children's Aid Society is Still Without Shelter—Two Different Properties

The joint committee in connection with the purchase of a Children's Shelter for the Counties of Lincoln and Welland and the City of St. Catharines met in the County Court House on Tuesday afternoon following the appointment of Warden Johnston of Lincoln County as Chairman, on motion of Mayor Burgoyne of St. Catharines and Councillor Grenville of Welland, the discussion proceeded along the usual lines and with the usual result, that nothing was accomplished and the meeting was adjourned at the call of the chair, so that the committee from Lincoln and Welland Counties could report to their various councils.

The meeting was adjourned especially so that the Welland committee might receive power from their council to purchase other properties than the Keefe property in Thorold. The joint committee, as a whole, are in favor of maintaining the union but the Welland committee favors the Keefe property and the Lincoln and City committees favor the Gilleland property. The question of price, main insurance, etc., was all gone over again at the meeting on Tuesday afternoon but as the Welland committee had only power to purchase the Keefe property nothing could be done in the matter.

Another site was offered to the committee in the Baxter household, Thorold. This place was recently damaged by fire. The price suggested was $3,500.

The committee discussed the site but did not think it suitable.

Ald. Nihon stated that he had a property in mind that was better than the Keefe or Welland properties. It was a small lot and he was not sure whether the owners would sell it or not but he refused to mention any name. Those present were: Warden Johnston, Mayor Burgoyne, Warden Rydman, Ald. Nihon, Ald. Reeves, Ald. Bradley, Ald. Jencks and Reeves, Ald. Trenchard and Steele.

TEA ROOM OPENED

On Wednesday, May 17th, a large party are coming by motor and H. G. & B. special cars to see the blossoms and have tea at the Tea Room which will be re-opened. Special preparations are being made for the re-opening, and the public are invited to patronize the Tea Room then and throughout the season. Donations of milk, cream, butter, eggs, cakes, etc., will be gratefully received.

For particulars concerning the work for Hospital No. 4 Canadian General, see Mrs. Starr's letter in some issue of the INDEPENDENT.

THE H. G. & B. FRANCHISE

Grimsby Council is now taking up the Question of Granting a new Franchise to This Road—Present Agreement runs out in July—Agreement Should be Drawn by a Competent Man, for H. G. & B. Will Crawl Through any Loop-hole That can be Found.

The question of a new franchise being granted to the H. G. & B. Railway Co. is the all absorbing topic with the members of the GRIMSBY Council at the present time, and it is a question that will take a lot of consideration and wise legislation on the part of the Town Fathers. The present franchise held by the H. G. & B. runs out in July, and the Council are now taking steps towards the drawing up of a new one. The H. G. & B. in one sense has been a good thing for GRIMSBY and in another sense it has been little but a nuisance, especially to the people living on Main St.

There are several changes in the old franchise which should be embodied in the new one. These changes the H. G. & B. have never lived up to, and have never been made to live up to them.

In the drawing of the new agreement the Council should see that it is drawn by a competent man and that no loop holes are left for the H. G. & B. to crawl out through, for they certainly will crawl if they get the chance. The new agreement should be "iron-clad" in every respect and the citizens should make the H. G. & B. live up to it.

We do not purpose taking this question up in these columns until some sort of an agreement has been reached between the two bodies concerned, and then we will have our say one way or the other.

LIEUT LIDDLE DIED FIGHTING

Mr. Thomas Liddle, GRIMSBY, has just received a letter from Flight Lieut. Gordon Burdick, in England, and from his reference to the death of the late Flight Lieut. Robert Liddle it would appear that the latter had met his death in a battle between airships.

Lieut. Burdick's letter in part says: "He was the only friend I ever had in life, and I desired to go far less than I do, not an enemy in the world and I hope before my time comes to be able in some way to help to avenge for him. . . . Had God not taken him away he would have made a name for himself such as anybody in Canada would have cause to envy. There was no pain, and HE DIED FIGHTING, the finest death that anybody could have."

Facts and Fancies

By Frank Fairborn

There is considerable talk at the present time about Germany desiring peace.

In her last note to the United States there seemed to be an undercurrent which would indicate that the Kaiser was anxious that President Wilson would use his good offices with Great Britain in an effort to bring about peace.

There has also been dispatches from Europe to the effect that Germany had asked the Pope to try and arrange with the allies with a view to discussing the subject of peace. Germany, in this matter as in all other matters pertaining to the war, seems to act entirely on her own initiative without reference to her other two allies, Austria and Turkey.

Turkey is probably getting as hard hit at the present time as any of the three enemy powers, but Germany is not bothering her head about Turkey. If things were going well Austria and Turkey could look out for themselves. It may be taken for granted, therefore, that if Germany is throwing out feelers with a view to early peace that Germany is feeling the pinch—it is good betting that Germany sees breakers ahead or she would not be bother about peace.

Germany may talk peace all she likes at the present time but this is not the time for the allies to talk peace. It is the time for the allies to talk war, and back it up with lots of men and material.

The fact that France has been able to hold Germany at Verdun in spite of every effort that great military power could make is positive proof that now is not the time for the allies to talk peace.

France has done wonders on land and Great Britain has equally done wonders on sea, while Russia with her tremendous drive into Austria in the fall of 1914, and her overwhelming drive into Turkey in the spring of 1915 has also done wonders, while Italy has done her good share by keeping Austria busy, and must not be forgotten that little Belgium did more than her share by checking the first great onslaught, thus giving France and Britain time to rally their forces.

From the commencement of the war Germany felt that she would be able, by making tremendous drives first on one country and then on another, to compel those countries to sue for peace. She thought if she could drive into France and take Paris that the French would sue for peace and she would only have to fight Great Britain on the west.

Germany also felt certain that by a tremendous drive upon unprepared Russia in the east that she could compel that great country to sue for peace and thus be able to withdraw all her forces and fling them against Great Britain, who was the real power that she dreaded.

But unfortunately each country took the brunt of battle and took its share of the medicine and still kept its face to the foe and rejected all overtures of peace and all have remained in the fight to the present moment.

The war from this time on should be conducted on the principle of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. Germany has slashed and slaughtered Belgium. The soldiers of Belgium victoriously through Germany.

France has shed her very life blood in defence of her homes and people, and she should have an opportunity to march victoriously over German soil.

Russia has seen her people slaughtered almost massacred by the tremendous over-powering forces of the German artillery, and this mighty nation has seen her armies forced to retire again and again before the long prepared army of Germany and she should have an opportunity of retaliation and retribution.

Great Britain has sent her sons, both from the Homeland and the colonies, to fill thousands of graves in a foreign land in order that she might preserve her own tight little island from the invasion of the Hun. She has also seen her finest passenger palaces and merchant ships slaughtered one by one up into the hundreds and it is but only fair that she should have the opportunity of lashing the German milliarism and trampling it beneath the feet of freedom in order that this octopus of evil might have an opportunity of destruction of the nations never again be able to rear its head.

The time for peace has passed. Now is the time for war. The time for peace was before the soil of France was saturated with the blood of her sons. The time for peace was before thousands of hardy Russians were annihilated. The time for peace was before the Kaiser killed 100,000. The time for peace was before the innocent children and women and non-combatants were plunged to the bottom of the sea by the torpedoes from the submarines. Peace should not be made at the Hague, nor in London, nor in Paris, nor in Petrograd, nor in Washington, nor yet in Rome. The peace treaty should be signed in Berlin while the mighty armies of the Kaiser, the King, and the President stood round to see that the Hun was made to perform what they promised.

Mr. Phillips Thompson, of Oakville, Ontario, has sent the following letter to the editor of The Hamilton Times:

To the Editor of The Times:
Sir,—Is there any measure of brutality or meanness to which the reactionary British Government may resort, which the servile Canadian press is not ready to justify and applaud? By the shooting in cold blood of a dozen or more of the Sinn Féin prisoners England has put herself on a level with Prussian and Austrian despotism and exposed the utter hypocrisy of her pretensions to superior civilization and enlightenment. And so far I have not noticed a single Canadian journalist who has the courage to denounce these atrocities—as they certainly would have done had any other nation been concerned. I am glad, however, to note that there is a "saving remnant" of school Liberalism in England and that some newspapers there are beginning to realize how their country is being degraded by the reactionary crew now in power.

Oakville, Ont., May 16th.
If Mr. Phillips Thompson would not shoot the rebels and murderers in Ireland I would like to ask him what would he do with them—What would his plan of action be.

A man who deliberately shoots another either from in front or behind is a murderer, but a man who causes the death of hundreds of people is an arch-murderer, and there is no punishment adequate for him.

The Irish ring leaders who have been not only guilty of murdering men but they were guilty of murdering women and children and all who came in front of their guns promiscuously. They were arch-murderers in the highest degree.

Not only were these men guilty of murdering men but they were thoroughly arranged for, but they were rebels and they were arch-murderers.

In addition to this they were guilty of burning down their own city of Dublin and of firing heavy calibre guns to destroy property belonging to innocent people and raising flames by thousands of people who had spent their lives in building homes or places, all of which were swept away in a few moments when the rebels gave the work to destroy and kill.

In my opinion there is no punishment that can be meted out to men that are adequate to crime of this kind.

Had these men had even the slightest basis for a hope that they would bring about a better condition than that which existed there would be some slight excuse for them. But they had no grounds for any such hope and consequently the death and destruction which they caused was done without the least chance that any one in the entire world would be benefitted while thousands were sure to be injured.

As soon as any man or any set of men become a menace to the community they should be immediately removed from the community and the only proper way to remove them is by the rope or the bullet.

BOY'S ESSAY ON EDITORS

I don't know how newspapers come to be in this world and I don't think the Lord knows for he ain't had nothing to say about them in the bible.

I think the editor is the missing link we read about and stayed in the bush until the flood and then came out and wrote the thing up and has been here ever since. I don't think he ever died. I never saw a dead one or ever heard of one getting licked. Our paper is a mighty good one, but the editor goes without underwear all winter and don't wear any socks, and paw hain't paid his subscription since the paper started. I asked paw if that was the reason why the editor had to suck the juice out of straw balls in the winter and had to go to bed in the summer when he had his shirt washed.

Then pa got mad and took me out in the woodshed and kicked me awful hard. If the editor makes mistakes folks say he ought to be hanged but if the doctor makes any mistakes he buries them and people doesn't say anything because he can read and write Latin. When the editor makes mistakes there is law suits and swearing and a big fuss, but if the doctor makes one there is a funeral, cut flowers and perfect silence. A doctor can use a word a mile long without him or anyone else knowing what it means, but if the editor uses one he has to spell it.

If the doctor goes to see another man's wife he charges the man for a visit, but if the editor should go he gets a load or backshot.

TILE DRAIN CHEAPER THAN OPEN DRAIN

Many farmers are laboring under the mistaken idea that a closed drain is much more expensive than an open drain, and are therefore wasting money in the construction of many small open drains. The fact of the matter is, that in the majority of cases, especially where the less than one foot in diameter is required, the closed drain is the cheaper. The slope of the drain of an open drain should not be less than 1 in. 100, and the drain should be in most cases for irrigated lands, at least 4 in. or 5 ft. deep. Figuring an open drain of this size and comparing the cost of the same with a 10 in. tile drain, we find that they are just about equal.

The cost of the construction, however, is not the only thing to be taken into consideration, but the maintenance of the system is also of great importance. In the case of the open drain, we have conditions exactly right for their rank growth of vegetation, and the open drain continually needs attention. The cost of maintenance therefore is high. The closed-tile drain, on the other hand, if properly installed, requires very little attention as far as maintenance is concerned, and in the end is cheaper than the open drain.

Open drains have their place and serve their purpose well when properly used, but they should be constructed for outlets of larger drain systems where the tile would be out of the question on account of the large size necessary. They are, however, entirely out of place when constructed as lateral drains for individual farms. —E. B. Hosse, Colorado Agricultural College, Fort Collins, Colo.

WASHING AND TIME OF SHEARING SHEEP

In an experiment conducted for three years, by the Ohio Experiment Station, it was found that unwashed sheep produced from 14 per cent. to 27 per cent. more grease wool than did washed sheep, although there was practically no difference in the amount of scoured wool produced. The difference in shrinkage in scouring the wool produced in this experiment was great enough to indicate that if washed and unwashed wools are bought on a basis of the amount of scoured wool they will yield, the sheep raiser does not receive a sufficient premium for washed wool to repay him for the cost of washing and for the loss in weight of fleece. Since washing sheep neither improves the quality or condition of the wool fiber, nor lessens the cost of scouring it, the practice has little to commend it.

Unwashed sheep shorn April 12 produced less grease wool but slightly more scoured wool than did those shorn June 1. The earlier shorn sheep also made larger gains. This fact, together with the other advantages of early shearing, would seem to offset the greater amount of wool produced by the late shorn sheep and to indicate that sheep should be shorn early enough to avoid hot weather in spring, particularly in case of sheep that are being fattened.

WATCH FOR CANKER WORMS

J. B. Houser, associate entomologist of the Ohio Experiment Station, says that the parent moth of the canker worm have been observed in considerable numbers in some sections of the State during the last two weeks and it seems that this well known insect may do considerable harm this season. It will be remembered that the male canker worm moth is a dusky miller measuring about an inch across its spread wings and that the female is wingless, appearing somewhat like a spider. The females emerge from the ground and crawl up the trees where the trunk to the small twigs, where the eggs are deposited. With the expansion of the leaves, the eggs hatch and the striped measuring worms or caterpillars begin eating the foliage. If the worms are abundant and no attempt is made to control them, the trees may be entirely defoliated. When the branches are jarred the caterpillars let themselves down by a silken thread.

The caterpillars are most easily killed when they are young, therefore it is important that the infested trees be sprayed as soon as the tiny, newly hatched larvae begin feeding, and at this time it is necessary to observe quite closely in order to find them. For control purposes use arsenate of lead paste four pounds, to each fifty gallons of water. Special precautions should be taken to thoroughly spray the tops of the trees, since you sent some more Zam-Buk to your soldier friend. The men at the front are asking for it. They say there is nothing to equal Zam-Buk for the many little accidents incidental to a soldier's life; nothing ends pain and draws out inflammation so quickly.

No warping, bulging or breaking at the centre of heat—the strain is taken up by the two-piece fire-pot which permits no ashes to cling or clog.

When an injury is sustained, if the wound is neglected and left exposed to germs, festering is liable to follow, so that even a very minor injury, neglected, may have serious consequences. If, however, a soldier has a box of Zam-Buk in his pocket, to apply at the right moment, much unnecessary suffering can be avoided.

See to it, therefore, that your soldier friend is kept supplied with Zam-Buk. Remember, too, Zam-Buk is just as useful in the home! All druggists 50c., or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

CHAPTER XIII. Berrie's Vigil.

As Wayland's mind cleared he became conscious of a presence. He knew what had taken place, but he did not feel free to ask her. "She will tell me if she wishes me to know." That she had vanished heiden and sent him on his way was evident, although he had not been able to hear what she had said to him at the last. What lay between the enemy's furious onslaught and the aid he had in making the camp could only be surmised. "I wonder if she used her pistol?" Wayland asked himself. "Something like death must have stared him in the face."

That she loved him with the complete passion of her powerful and simple nature he knew, for her voice and reached through the haze of his semi-unconsciousness with thrilling power. The touch of her lips to his, the close clasp of her strong arms were of over greater convincing quality. And yet he wished the revelation had come in some other way. His pride was abraded. His manhood seemed somehow humiliated. It was a disconcerting reversal of the ordinary relations between hero and heroine, and he saw no way of re-establishing the normal attitude of the male.

Entirely unaware of what was passing in the mind of her patient Berrie went about her duties with a cheerfulness which astonished the sufferer in the tent. She seemed about to hum a song as she set the skillet on the fire, but a moment later she called out, in a tone of irritation. "Here comes Nash!"

"I'm glad of that," answered Wayland, although he perceived something of her displeasure.

Nash, on his way to join the supervisor, raised a friendly greeting as he saw the girl and drew rein. "I expected to meet you farther down the hill," he said. "Tony phoned that you had started. Where did you leave the supervisor?"

"Over at the station waiting for you. Where's your outfit?"

"Camped down the trail a mile or so. I thought I'd better push through tonight. What about Norcross? Isn't he with you?"

She hesitated an instant. "He's in the tent. He fell and struck his head on a rock, and I had to go into camp here."

"Well, he had a terrible fall. But he's easier now. I think he's asleep."

"May I look in on him?"

"I don't think you'd better take the time. It's a long, hard ride from here to the station. It will be deep night before you can make it."

"Don't you think the supervisor would want me to camp here tonight and do what I could for you? If Norcross is badly injured you will need me."

She liked Nash, and she knew he was right, and yet she was reluctant to give up the pleasure of her lone vigil. "He's not in any danger, and we'll be able to ride on in the morning."

Nash, thinking of her as Clifford Belden's promised wife, had no suspicion of her feeling toward Norcross. Therefore he gently urged that to go on was quite out of order. "I can't think of leaving you here alone—certainly not till I see Norcross and find out how badly he is hurt."

She yielded. "I reckon you're right," she said. "I'll go see if he is awake." He followed her to the door of the tent, apprehending something new and inexplicable in her attitude. In the music of her voice as she spoke to the sick man was the love note of the note. "You may come in," she called back, and Nash, stooping, entered the small tent.

"Hello, old man! What you been doing with yourself? Hitting the high spots?"

Norcross smiled feebly. "No, the bill flew up and bumped me."

"How did it all happen?"

"I don't exactly know. It all came of a sudden. I had no share in it. I didn't go far to do it."

"Whether you did or not, you seem to have made a good job of it."

Nash examined the wounded man carefully, and his skill and strength in handling Norcross pleased Berrie, though she was jealous of the warm friendship which seemed to exist between them.

She had always liked Nash, but she resented him now, especially as he insisted on taking charge of the camp, but she gave way finally and went back to her post and jans with passive contentment.

A little later, when Nash came out to make report, she was not very gracious in her manner. "He's pretty badly hurt," he said. "There's an ugly gash in his scalp, and the shock has produced a good deal of pain and confusion in his head, but he's going to be all right in a day or two. For a man seeking rest and recuperation he certainly has had a rough run of venting."

Through a nervous mind, honorable forester, determined to keep away in mind that he was in the presence of the daughter of his chief, and that she was engaged to marry another, Nash was, after all, a man, and the witchery of the hour, the charm of the girl's graceful figure, asserted their power over him. His eyes grew tender, and his voice eloquent in spite of himself. His words he could guard, but it was hard to keep from his speech the song of the lover. The thought that he was to camp in her company, to help her about the fire, to see her from moment to moment, with full liberty to speak to her, to meet her glance, pleased him. It was the most romantic and moving episode in his life, and though of a rather dry and analytic temperament he had a sense of poetry.

The night, black, oppressive and silent, brought a closer bond of mutual help and understanding between them. She grew friendlier and asked him about his work and especially about his ambitions and plans for the future. They discussed the forest and its enemies, and he wondered at her freedom in speaking of the mill and saloon. He said: "Of course you know that Alec Belden is a partner in that business, and I'm told—of course I don't know this—that Clifford Belden is also interested."

She offered no defense of young Belden, and this unconcern pleased him. He had expected indignant protest, but she merely replied: "I don't care who owns it. It should be rooted out. I hate that kind of thing. It's just another way of robbing these poor fellows."

"Clifford should get out of it. Can't you persuade him to do so?"

"I don't think I can."

"His relationship to you?"

"He is not related to me."

Her tone amused him. "You know what I mean."

"Of course I do, but you're mistaken. We're not related that way any longer."

This silenced him for a few moments, then he said: "I'm rather glad of that. He isn't anything like the man you thought he was—I couldn't say these things before—but he is as greedy as Alec, only not so open about it."

All this comment, which moved the forester so deeply to utter, seemed not to interest Berrie. She sat staring at the fire with the calm brow of an Indian. Clifford Belden had passed out of her life as completely as he had vanished out of the landscape. She felt an immense relief at being rid of him and resented his being brought back even as a subject of conversation.

Wayland, listening, fancied he understood her desire and said nothing that might arouse Nash's jealousy.

Nash on his part, knowing that she had broken with Belden, began to understand the tenderness, the anxious care of her face and voice, as she bent above young Norcross. As the night deepened and the cold air sang, he asked, "Have you plenty of blankets for a bed?"

"Oh, yes," she answered, "but I don't intend to sleep."

"Oh, you must!" he declared. "Go to bed. I will keep the fire going."

At last she consented. "I will make my bed right here at the mouth of the tent close to the fire," she said, "and you can call me if you need me."

"Why not put your bed in the tent? It's going to be cold up here."

"I am all right outside," she protested.

"Put your bed inside, Miss Berrie. We can't let conversations count above timber line. I shall rest better if I know you are properly sheltered."

And so it happened that for the third time she shared the same roof with her lover. But the nurse was uppermost in her now.

Nash was the first to arise in the dusk of dawn, and Berrie, awakened by the crackle of his fire, soon joined him.

"If you'll round up our horses, Mr. Nash, I'll make breakfast and we'll get going," she said.

Nash, enthralled, lingered while she twisted her hair into plaits, then went out to bring in the ponies.

Wayland came out a little unwillingly, but looking very well. "I think I shall discourage my friends from coming to the rescue for their health," he said.

and recovery. "If I were a novelist now all this would be good for my mill."

Beneath his joking he was profoundly chagrined. He had hoped by this time to be as snappy, as alert as Nash, instead of which here he sat, shivering over the fire like a sick girl, his head swollen, his blood sluggish, but this discouragement only increased Berrie's tenderness—a tenderness which melted all his reserve.

"I'm not worth all your care," he said to her, with poignant glance.

The sun rose clear and warm, and the fire, the coffee, put new courage into him as well as into the others, and while the morning was yet early and the forest chill and damp with rain, the surveyor brought up the horses and started packing the outfit.

In this Berrie again took part, doing her half of the work quite as dextrously as Nash himself. Indeed, the forester was not only confused and not quite up to his usual level of adroitness.

At last both packs were on, and as they stood together for a moment Nash said: "This has been a great experience—one I shall remember as long as I live."

She stirred uneasily under his frank admiration. "I'm obliged to you," she replied, as heartily as she could command.

"Don't thank me. I'm indebted to you. There is no little in my life of such companionship as you and Norcross give me."

He helped Norcross mount his horse, and as he put the lead rope into Berrie's hand he said, with much feeling: "Good luck to you. I shall remember this night all the rest of my life, Miss Berrie."

"I hate to be going to the rear," said

Wayland, whose bare, bandaged head made him look like a wounded young officer. "But I guess it's better for me to lay off a week or two and recover my tone."

And so they parted, the surveyor riding his determined way up the naked mountain side toward the clouds, while Berrie and her ward plunged at once into the dark and dripping forest below. "If you can stand the grief," she said, "we'll go clear through."

Her caution was all for him. She tried each dangerous slough first and thus was able to advise him which way was safest. His head throbed with pain and his knees were weary, but he rode on.

At last they came into open ground on a high ridge and were gladdened by the valley outspread below them, for it was still radiant with color, though not as brilliant as before the rain.

At 1 o'clock on the bank of a clear stream the girl halted. "I reckon we'd better camp awhile. You look tired, and I am hungry."

She unstrapped one pack animal and spread some blankets on the grass. "Lie down and rest while I boil some coffee," she commanded, and he obeyed, too tired to make pretension toward assisting.

Lying so, feeling the magic of the sun, hearing the music of the water and watching the girl, he regained a serene mood, and when she came back with his food he thanked her for it with a glance before which her eyes fell. "I don't see why you are so kind to me. I really believe you like to do things for me." Her head drooped to hide her face, and he went on: "Why do you care for me? Tell me!"

"I don't know," she murmured. Then she added, with a flash of bravery. "But I do."

"What a mystery it all is! You turn from a splendid fellow like London to a 'skate' like me. London worships you—you know that—don't you?"

"I know—he"—she ended, vaguely distressed.

"Did he ask you to marry him?"

"Yes."

"Why didn't you? He's just the mate for you. He's a man of high character and education." She made no answer to this, and he went on: "Dear girl, I'm not worth your care—truly, I'm not. I resented your engagement to Belden, for he was a brute, but London is different. He thinks the world of you. He'll go high in the service. I've never done anything in the world—I never shall. It will be better for you if I go—tomorrow."

She took his hand and pressed it to her cheek, then, putting her arm about his neck, drew him to her bosom and kissed him passionately. "You break my heart when you talk like that," she protested, with tears. "You mustn't say such gloomy things—I won't let you give up. You shall come right home with me, and I will nurse you till you are well. It was all my fault."

"I will not have it go that way," he said. "I've brought you only care and unhappiness thus far. I'm an alien—my ways are not your ways."

"I can change," she answered. "I hate my ways, and I like yours."

As they argued she felt no shame, and he voiced no resentment. She knew his mood. She understood his doubt, his depression. She pleaded as a man might have done, ready to prove her love, eager to restore his self respect, while he remained both bitter and sadly contemptuous.

A cow hand riding up the trail greeted Berrie respectfully, but a cynical smile broke out on his lips as he passed on. Another witness; another gossip.

She did not care. She had no further concern of the valley's comment. Her life's happiness hung on the drooping eyelashes of this wounded boy, and to win him back to cheerful acceptance of life was her one concern.

"I've never been any motive," he continued. "I've always done what pleased me at the moment—or because it was easier to do as others were doing. I want to collect that way."

Truth be, I never had any surplus vitality, and my father was a
